2022 ANNUAL REPORT

MESSAGE FROM THE CHAMPLIN FOUNDATION

As recovery from the pandemic slowly continues, we have found great value in going back to basics.

Basics like the deep desire of the Champlins, our founders, to “do the most good possible,” as they noted in their letter to the Foundation’s future leaders. We strive to realize that vision and work to live up to those values by prioritizing human connection with the agencies and organizations that work every day, every hour, to help the people of Rhode Island to live safe, healthy, and flourishing lives.

We are not alone in recognizing that these organizations and the committed leaders who steer them do more than good; they inspire and empower us, all while providing for our community.

The Tomaquag Museum, for example, inspires by elevating Indigenous culture, heritage, and its contributions to a broader audience. The MAE Organization for the Homeless empowers Rhode Islanders through building skills and offering support to realize a better life. And the Rhode Island Community Food Bank and its network of providers ensure nourishment to those who need it most during challenging times.

The Foundation is working to build stronger relationships with grantees. This year was about much more proactive listening, meeting people where they are, and being open to learning about what we can do to make an impact in pursuit of the Champlins’ wishes.

In addition to sharing projects and priorities across our nine areas of focus in the 2022 Annual Report, we reached out to just a few of the many nonprofit leaders who inspire us to ask about the most important lessons they’ve learned over the past three years. Their thoughtful responses are featured throughout this report. They offer us all a roadmap of sorts for understanding how the challenges of recent years can inform our work.

Our team at Champlin is grateful for that wisdom and leadership, as are our trusted colleagues on the Distribution Committee, who bring their experience to thoughtfully consider the applications for support that come before us. This year, we were pleased to welcome Paola Fernandez, senior vice president with Centreville Bank, and William F. Hatfield, retired president of Bank of America in Rhode Island, to the Committee.

Despite being faced with rising costs, supply chain challenges, staffing shortages, and more, Rhode Island's nonprofit community, and its inspiring leadership, has tackled each challenge with persistence and resilience. At the end of the day, it's their call to action that drives Champlin's: do the most good possible. Let's continue to do just that, together.

Arts & Culture

For many Rhode Islanders, pandemic lockdowns underscored the importance of community and the need to find hope and inspiration. After being isolated from friends, loved ones, and neighbors for too long, we came to crave a sense of belonging and connection—places where we could be ourselves, enjoy the company of others, and find hope and purpose.

Places like the vibrant and inclusive arts organizations we were proud to support this year.

Community can take many different forms. You may find it on a beautifully restored basketball court, a public work of art courtesy of My HomeCourt, or at a performance in a place like the Southside Cultural Center of Rhode Island, where you will be welcomed in to experience performance, artmaking, kinship, and cultural expression. This year also saw arts and cultural organizations undertake exciting expansions. Providence-based Teatro ECAS, for example, the only Spanish-language theater company north of New York, will make a new performance home in the Valley Arts District.

“The movement for race, equity, and justice that accelerated during the pandemic has revealed new ways of operating for all of us. This should transform how we work and make meaningful, long-term change possible.”

Conservation & Parks

While the Foundation spent many years focused on conserving green space, our work is shifting to making the environment and nature accessible and verdant for more Rhode Islanders. We look to encourage ways in which people can get on the land, experience the wonder of animals and marine life, and support community farming.

Through their Market Mobile platform, Farm Fresh Rhode Island is connecting directly with farmers and consumers, making it easy to source local produce and reduce food waste. Revive the Roots Foundation expanded their existing footprint of ecologically regenerative and dynamic social spaces, thereby increasing the number of people who can advance their goals of creating more sustainable agriculture. Save the Bay, a long-trusted and peerless organization in the Ocean State, continues to grow, evolve and significantly scale up its marine education, inspiring the spirit of conservation to more visitors at its new aquarium

“The most important lessons we have learned over the last three years are to be proactive, learn from experts, collaborate with partners, and never give up. We have been able to scale up significantly by investing in our leaders, sustained teamwork, creating strong, innovative strategic plans, and utilizing opportunities.”

Education

Learning should be a lifelong journey, and Rhode Island's education landscape offers access at every stage of that journey. From formal classrooms and after-school programming to higher education access and adult career education, these organizations give people of all ages the tools they need to develop new skills and explore new ideas.

A safe environment ensures students can achieve their highest potential. The San Miguel School is improving security and communications with a new intercom and card entry system for their middle school students. Leadership Rhode Island is enhancing meeting space for their professional development trainings. Newport Community School, which will furnish and equip classrooms and meeting space, is an example of the broader continuum. They work with learners of all ages to complement classroom learning and support academic success, personal responsibility, and economic self-sufficiency. DownCity Design, too, is enhancing mechanical systems in their new facility, where they offer a spectrum of programming from after-school graphic design for middle schoolers to professional development for educators.

"I have learned that it is critical to trust your team, to be willing to be vulnerable and lean on each other during challenging times. It took all of us, collectively, to figure out how to offer library services during a public health emergency. We asked questions, shared fears, researched, listened to librarians from around the state and country, experimented with new skills and platforms, made mistakes, challenged ideas, gathered our courage, and kept moving forward—together!"

Healthcare

The healthcare grantees this year serve every corner of the state, making the physical and mental health of Rhode Islanders their top priority. From Hope Valley and Wakefield to Cumberland and Portsmouth, these organizations expand access to high-quality care and improve the well-being of our communities, despite facing significant ongoing challenges around workforce shortages and burnout of healthcare professionals.

CODAC Behavioral Healthcare is creating a state-of-the-art integrated health center in Providence where patients can work with doctors, nurses, and counselors to take a more holistic approach to their wellness. Women & Infants Hospital, where more than 80 percent of all births in the state take place, is building a new labor and delivery center to add to their already established suite of services and support for expectant families. And in Hope Valley, Wood River Health expanded its facility in order to provide high-quality care to more patients.

“Our biggest lesson has been understanding the substantial impact we can have by frequently engaging with our communities and museum patrons through digital technologies. This goes beyond putting static images on the website or offering Zoom programs. We engage people as stakeholders, regularly sharing the continual work we do for the care of the collection and the facility. Despite the lack of normal tour and event income, we were able to grow our account balances because the public listened, cared, and wanted to help.”

Historic Preservation & Heritage

At The Champlin Foundation, we understand that learning from the past contributes to our understanding of the present and our ambitions for the future. Rhode Islanders can only learn from and build upon the past when elements of our history are protected and maintained.

The important work of protecting and maintaining these historic properties is happening in communities across the state.

Congdon Street Baptist Church in Providence is undergoing exterior restoration, masonry work is underway at St. Mary's Episcopal Church in Portsmouth, and the South County History Center in Kingston is replacing the roof and repairing masonry at the Old Washington County Jail.

"During the pandemic I really learned to not take for granted the time that we have as teachers with our students. They were ready to learn, work hard, and have fun no matter what life threw their way. Also, it's much easier and more enjoyable to teach in person. Facial expressions are such a clue to whether someone is understanding an idea or not."

Libraries

Libraries are true centers of our communities, offering training and education, a quiet refuge from the chaos of busy schedules, and a public meeting space for debate and collaboration in addition to being a repository of knowledge. Libraries are a place of meaningful connection and exploration.

As people spend an increasing amount of time online and on social media, libraries have proven to be a place of adaptation and innovation. In pursuit of serving more patrons, providing compelling programming, and bringing communities together, libraries across the state continue to invest in their physical spaces. The Jesse M. Smith Memorial Library in Harrisville is enhancing its children's department, the Pawtucket Public Library is conducting exterior masonry repairs, the Davisville Free Library is prioritizing accessibility, while the Maury Loontjens Memorial Library continues its new construction in Narragansett.

"The most important lesson I've learned from the past three years is how essential it is to focus on using an equity lens as we design, implement, and sustain programs. We've learned just how vulnerable our community is to crisis, whether it's the loss of jobs or housing, or the dangers of a pandemic virus. We're asking harder questions of ourselves and our work and listening more deeply. It hasn't been easy, but by becoming a better, stronger organization, we're also helping build a more united and empowered community."

Social Services

Social services represent the largest share of Champlin funding in 2022, with 45 organizations receiving nearly $5 million to provide and expand essential services. These nonprofits, led by the devoted champions of our communities, provide the most vulnerable Rhode Islanders with access to food, housing, job training, and more.

Cape Verdean American Community Development, which honors the past, embraces the present, and empowers the future of Rhode Island's robust Cape Verdean community, will make some interior renovations to their building—a beloved space for education and fellowship. A mobile van at Children's Friend will enable the agency to go outside the office into the community to increase use of WIC benefits. Women's Refugee Care will also take their services on the road with the use of a passenger van that allows them to better connect with women in the African refugee community.

"The practice of medicine and the future of health care demands for us to be agile, patient-centric, innovative, sophisticated, and inclusive. This requires us to rethink, reinvent, and reimagine where we are and where we are going. We must lead the next generation of health care professionals in a pursuit of self and social awareness, inspiring them to push harder, challenge norms, and empower both themselves and their patients to be agents of change in this ever-changing world."

Welfare of Animals

The community of nonprofits that serve animals in Rhode Island is small but mighty, and Champlin supported five such organizations this year that are multi-species providers, working regionally.

The purchase of a new van for the Providence Animal Rescue League will allow them to respond to emergencies and bring animals to safety, while the West Place Animal Sanctuary in Tiverton is putting an addition onto its barn, where they provide sanctuary for horses and farm animals that have suffered from neglect and cruelty and rehabilitate waterfowl and game birds.

“As all nonprofits experienced unprecedented times over the past three years, what emerged as a significant lesson was the importance of the community at large, understanding the Y as a ‘cause-driven’ organization. This led to immediate donations from members, individuals, and foundations to navigate through these turbulent times, and continue to enable the Y to provide for our mission.”

Youth Services

From new grantees to long-established nonprofits with a deep history of Champlin funding, the organizations receiving support in the youth services category inspire creativity and advance learning and the development of leadership skills in young people around the state. With a workforce shortage crisis looming in Rhode Island and beyond, investing in the next generation talent pipeline and providing early interventions for children who are struggling are particularly important priorities.

The Boys & Girls Clubs provide consistent services and support for youth and families, with projects like the new Woonsocket Clubhouse coming online from the Boys & Girls Club of Northern Rhode Island, and expansion of the Wanskuck Clubhouse from the Boys & Girls Club of Providence. Other innovative and engaging offerings receiving support include the workforce development programs offered by YouthBuild Providence, and a youth wrestling program offered by first-time grantee Beat the Streets New England.

“Of the many lessons Covid taught us, one of the most important has been understanding the power of effective communication. In the world of nonprofits, partnerships are crucial, and we all must evaluate our own assumptions and biases in order to cultivate stronger relationships and maximize collective impact.”
